COUNCIL ADOPTS BUILDING PLAN

Last Monday evening at the regular meeting of the City Council, an ordinance was passed regulating the use of a better grade of lumber and concrete in the construction of homes and other buildings in Daly City. This ordinance was given a lot of study by the members of the City Council before its passage, as in most cases a man's life-time savings goes toward purchasing a home, and he should be entitled to the best of material and workmanship.

A permit was given in error, allowing a mill and cabinet shop to operate on the east line of Mission street, between Crocker avenue and Wellington avenue. As the machinery has already been installed, the Council decided to allow the party to stay until July 1, advising him to secure a new location by that time. This form of permit comes under the heading of "industrial," and Mission street is now zoned for business and commercial.

The monthly report of the poundmaster was read and ordered filed.

The regular monthly bills were read and warrants ordered drawn on the treasury for payment of the same

Jefferson baseball team defeated by San Jose, 4-3, last week, Friday. Jefferson was well in the lead when two Jefferson players made two bad errors and San Jose won. Davies pitched good ball and held San Jose to four hits. For San Jose, Quine was the chief star. Pastorino and Oppermann were the other Jefferson Stars. After the game, the coach and the team and a number of supporters went to an undignified looking grill but noted for good eats and were allowed to eat all they could for 50 cents each person. The meal consisted of soup, French bread, chicken, slices of beef, and French fried potatoes. Last Tuesday Jefferson defeated St. James 14-10. Petrocchi pitched for Jefferson. St. James was leading 8-1 when Jefferson had two rallies and at the end of the game came out ahead.

MRS. EMZIE NEWLON AT REST

"Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath,
And stars to set—but all
Thou hast all seasons for Thine own, O Death!"

Sunday evening, April 26, as the hand of the dial pointed to 8 P. M., Mrs. Emzie Newlon passed peacefully to the heavenly home. Although for the past five months she had patiently struggled against the inevitable and both hopes and fears were held for her recovery, the shock of her passing is not any easier to bear by those nearest and dearest. She passed away at the home of her stepdaughter, Mrs. A. Smith, of this city.

Emzie Cather Newlon was born near Flemington, West Virginia, January 16, 1848. She was united in marriage to T. C. Newlon on August 14, 1883. From their union one daughter, Mrs. J. Zimmer, of Redwood City, was born. This daughter and three step-children remain to mourn her loss. She was a loving mother, and a Christian character. Her father, a Baptist minister was responsible for her early Christian training, to which she remained true to the end. She was a member of one of the pioneer families of West Virginia, and the last member of her generation.

Funeral services were held at Lasswell's parlors at 2 P. M. Tuesday, April 28. She was laid to rest in Woodlawn cemetery.

At present writing she is resting quietly at her home. Several children have been bitten by dogs lately, and a strict survey will be conducted by the police department to get rid of all vicious dogs.

COLMA MAN VICTIM OF AUTO ACCIDENT

Trapped beneath a truck that overturned and burst into flames when struck by a "hit and run" automobile, Samuel Padrone, of Colma, was seriously injured last Sunday night.

Pietro Curchi, 5117 Mission street, asserted driver of the hit-run car, was found wandering in a dazed condition two hours after the accident and placed under arrest. He, too, was treated at the South San Francisco hospital for cuts and bruises and notation that he had been drinking was made.

According to Constable S. A. Landini, of Colma, Curchi, speeding at a terrific pace, struck Padrone's milk truck, overturning it. The broken gas tank ignited, enveloping Padrone in flames. The accident occurred on the highway south of Colma.

H. E. Stronberg, of Burlingame, a witness to the accident, dragged Padrone from the burning truck and then turned in a fire alarm. The driver of the hit-run car, Stronberg reported, leaped from his machine, climbed a fence and disappeared through a nearby cemetery.

Dougherty was a passenger in the automobile that struck and wrecked the front of Parodi's store at 7009 Mission street on that date. Upon his arrest he was cited to appear before Judge Ellis C. Johnson, on the morning of April 20. Dougherty had the case postponed until last Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock, at which time a fine of $25 was imposed upon him by Judge Johnson.

RAINED OUT GAME IS BOOKED AGAIN

If there is anything to the old saying, "suspense builds up interest," the baseball game between the Daly City Merchants and Fosters' Lunch next Sunday should go over with a bang. These teams were scheduled to play on the Jefferson Union high school diamond last week end, but rain prevented the battle.

During the past week the opposing managers have had a chance to converse over the outcome of this game. After listening to both sides of the argument, it would be hard to give a decision as to the sure winner. Both pilots threaten to put the strongest team possible on the diamond.

Joe Randall, Fosters' manager, has a well balanced team, built around a star battery, Al Casilli, pitcher, and Wilson, catcher. His aggregation is noted for its fight and smart playing.

The Merchants, piloted by Ed Cavagnaro, have displayed exceptional ability in several departments. In the four games played this season, Albrecht, Walsh, Toole, Cameron, and Rettig have played high class baseball.

CITY WILL PROSPER DECLARE BUILDERS

Mayor H. H. Smith was host at a banquet in Eagles Hall, Saturday night, April 25, when a number of real estate men and builders gathered to discuss ways and means to boost Daly City. This gathering of business men followed closely upon the announcement by the State Highway Commission that money will be forthcoming to cover their portion of the cost in the widening of Mission street and San Jose avenue from the county line to Colma.

Mayor Smith, knowing that there are no people more interested in the future of Daly City than the builders and real estate men, called them together to get an expression as to their opinion of the future of Daly City.

The banquet table was beautifully decorated with flowers from Daly City nurseries. Using Daly City's pure water a toast was proposed to the happiness and prosperity of Daly City and its population.

Using as his theme "Daly City, the city that knows how," Mayor Smith spoke at length on the splendid water system in Daly City, and the low tax rate that the residents of this city enjoy. He also asked constructive criticism from those present.

Councilman A. J. Dalton spoke of the growth and development of Daly City, and expressed the opinion that with close co-operation Daly City would be in line for a great building boom. He referred to the improvements due in the near future and said, "Then watch us grow."

A. B. Frank, pioneer real estate broker of the New Misison district, spoke on the past, present and future of Daly City. Taking as his theme, "You are only as great as the things you do," he dwelt on the past of Daly City and its struggle to achieve a great future. "Co-operation is the key-note to success," he said. "Mission street is the artery leading direct to the heart of San Francisco, and the life-blood of the city flows through this great artery and will continue to do so for all time to come We have a chance now to widen and enlarge that artery. Let no one do, or even think of doing, a thing that would tend to hinder, lest we lose the great opportunity of all time to our beloved Daly City."

The mayor's request for constructive criticism met with a hearty response. Many valuable suggestions were offered relative to the type of homes that should be built in order to improve the appearance of the city, and many other suggestions were made in the line of improvements for this city.

Those who enjoyed Mrs. Headvall's hospitality were Mesdames F. Bryant, G. Gehringer, M. White, E. Twesten, A. Welch, D. Putney, A. Romer, L. Louvere, M. Orr, M. Owen, J. Jorgensen, J. Jordan, M. AMERICAN LEGION DANCE A SUCCESS

"Did she go over? I'll say! And did they strut? I'll say!" Thus in the parlance of the day are expressed the sentiments concerning the American Legion dance, staged by Daly City Post No. 410, on Friday night, April 24. Boy, how they flocked to the Daly City auditorium to do their stuff. Mac and his entire gang were there, and how. They played musical numbers dating back as far as grandfather's time in true hay-wire style, fiddle 'n everything; ballads of the nineties, when bustles and hair-rats were still in vogue and to top it all, a medley of the songs that warmed the heart in the days when the uniform of the day was just plain everday O. D.

There were polkas, schottische and mazurkas. There was even an attempt at a square dance; and who could control their feet when the music swung into a Paul Jones? Old and young, married or single, they all danced and danced, far into the night. The hall was packed and standing room was at a premium.

The boys of No. 410 and the ladies of the Unit added a touch of color to the occasion by wearing their uniform caps, and the care-free spirit of the evening, coupled with the fact that every one got a big play for their money, went far towards establishing new friendships and strengthening old ones.

This was the first venture of this nature undertaken by the Daly City Post, and the results were most encouraging toward further effort along the lines of trying to do things in a way that is acceptable to the public at large, for, judging from the hearty response on Friday evening, this dance was just about the thing the public has been waiting for, and no one went home disappointed.

The members of Daly City Post No. 419 want to extend thanks to every one for the whole-hearted support given them in making this so gratifying an event.

Don't ovelrook the date. Friday evening, May 1, will be the next regular American Legion meeting at Eagles Hall. Several vital matters will be discussed and acted upon. All members are earnestly urged to attend and get details regarding that little item of "eats" on the following meeting night. We believe "Doc" and "Moke" have one up their sleeve.

Four Legionaires and their ladies took a jaunt to Burlingame on Saturday evening to participate in a barn dance given by the Post of that city. The affair was put over in a big way, and from all reports an unusually good time was the order of the evening.

The American Legion Auxiliary will meet on Friday evening, May 8, at Eagles Hall. There will be presentation of the charter, and a number of visiting members of the Auxiliary will participate in the affairs of the evening. Refreshments will be served, so all members are urged to be in attendance.

Speaking of horseshoes: Thanks are due Mother Nature for withholding the rain from 10:30 to 1:30, permitting the weekly horseshoe contest at Daly City Park to proceed without interruption. The heavy precipitation left the courts in just the proper condition, and the games were snappy. Some of the boys showed evidence of back-yard practice and are far above the average, so bring on your experts. The games are open to all comers.

MRS. LILLIAN LANDINI WILL HEAD THE LADIES' HOME CLUB

Mrs. Lillian Landini was nominated to be the next president of the Ladies' Home Club, last Tuesday at her home on Winchester street, at a meeting of the club over which Mrs. Stella Jensen presided. After a very pleasant meeting, delicious refreshments were served by the hostess. After a luncheon at the home of Mrs. Landini on Tuesday, May 12, the election of officers will take place, and a reception to the outgoing president, Mrs. Stella Jensen, and the incoming president will be in order. Plans for the coming year will be discussed.

THE C. E. CARNIVAL POSTPONED TO MAY 12

In order that their carnival may be a big success, the young people of Grace Presbyterian church have postponed it for one week. May 12 is the new date. An entertainment will be given at 8 P. M., followed by refreshments and games in the social rooms. There is no admisison charge, but those attending are warned not to

BETTER HOMES FOR BETTER HOMES WEEK

We are enjoying Better Homes Week. As a member of a club whose object is to advocate everything and every one who is trying to better the American home of today, my small part in this affair is to write my views on a better home.

What is more pleasing to the mind, heart and soul of a being than "A Better Home." A better home means a better street, a better city, a better state, and a better nation; and most of all a better boy and a better girl; a better woman, a better man, and a better world for all.

Renovating, painting and cleaning the home outside and inside does not cost much more than our service. A simple home can be made most attractive by a new coat of paint, some fresh, crisp curtains, and a few new plants, for the garden will make the outside most pleasing.

A new picture for the wall, a few new books upon the shelf, some flowers, a cup or two, and we can call it "a better home."

We can, if we have the means, refurnish our home in the grandest way. After all it is not the cost of material things that count, but the way we enjoy them. The greatest things of life are free for the taking. I have acquaintances in all walks of life, with all kinds of homes. Some are richly endowed and some have only meager means of support. Enter both and you will in most cases much prefer the poorer of the two. Why? Because there is no great means of wealth to detract from the love and sacrifice that makes a real home. Those who start from the bottom and give up worldly pleasures for a rare picture, a good book, a bit of dainty china or music, that all who dwell within the home may enjoy it—they are the ones who make it the real home. For is it not the feeling that is within the home that gives the guest that something which he can not understand, but it makes us all akin.

I have a picture that hangs in my hall, near the front door, of a fireplace, a kettle over the flame, a comfort seat by the side, and flowers above on the shelf; and the verse below it reads:

HAIL GUEST!
We ask not what thou art;
If friend, we greet thee hand and heart;
If stranger, such no longer be;
If foe, our love shall conquer thee.

This verse has been in my home many years, and I love it more and more as the years roll by.

Without this great love and friendshipship, which costs us nothing, but enriches us a thousand fold, in the eyes and hearts of those we love; when we lose that which only the soul can give and forget the spiritual sense of teaching in the home, which should create all that is beautiful, then the house we live in becomes a place of convenience.

So let us make our homes better. A few flowers, music of the old school, good books, a painting, a nook all our own; children to give us cheer and a few tears. Let us have all the beautiful emotions of life within the home.

We must have sad days to enjoy glad days. So let us remember that we can attain the better home by making the little things the big things of our life, making the little plain home the big home of welcome and friendly greeting, with a hearth of warmth, a cup o' tea and toast, a banquet fit for kings.

A flower, a song, a hearth,
A chair, a book,
Makes a humble refuge
A golden nook.

LILLIAN G. LANDINI.

George F. Baker made his first dollar picking berries other pickers had overlooked under bushes near his home in Troy, N. Y. That was more than eighty years ago. He has picked many "berries" since, and on his recently celebrated ninety-first birthday the eminent New York banker was rated one of the five richest men in the world.

HIGH SCHOOL OPERETTA

"Miss Caruthers Returns," a musical comedy in two acts, by Chester Perry, was given Thursday, at 1 o'clock in the high school auditorium. It was full of good laughs, gave a picture of a heroine of the gay '80's, and included a pantomime of "The Melodrama." Of course, it had the usual triangle—the heroine (a blonde), the sweet, young hero, and the bold, black villain.

The story revolved around Miss Thyrza Caruthers, who had been left a large estate by her father, in whose will she had been requested to continue the support of one of his philanthropies, an Art Club, in West 61st street, New York, where talented young women might secure board and room at small cost while carrying on their studies in the various arts.

Miss Caruthers, at the death of her father, had gone to Europe to travel. On her return she determined to find out for herself just how her money was being used by Mrs. Jones, the matron of the Art Club, and to satisfy herself as to the characters of the girls who were receiving the benefits of her philanthropy. She gained entrance to the Art Club by posing as a maid, whereupon she learned that Mrs. Jones had been using money that should have gone to the support of the place, to purchase clothing for her niece, Desdemona; also that Desdemona was planing to elope with a Mr. Jerry Smith, pretending to be a millionaire. Miss Caruthers learned that he was an imposter who wished to marry Desdemona because he thought she was an heiress. She further learned that the girls were hard working, ambitious girls. She frustrated Desdemona's plan to elope and saved her from a compromising situation in which she seemed guilty of stealing her aunt's money. Later Thyrza revealed her true identity, forgave Mrs. Jones' indiscretion, and secured the lady's promise to give Desdemona another chance. She commended the girls for their loyalty to each other, and promised to help each one of them to realize her ambition.

As an added attraction, between acts, a song, "I Love the Moon," by Paul A. Rubens, was sung by eight members of the advanced class: Albert Boynton, Frank Catania, Ralp Cook, Stuart Ghent, Helen Reinhart, Dorothy Riddell, Madeline Safer, and Muriel Sherwood. Also, in Act II, Frances Poket, although not a chorus student, kindly consented to dance.

The pupils were trained by Miss Helen Burfield, teacher of music.

Among the members of the House of Representatives in the new Congress will be a full-fledged Major General of the regular army, Charles H. Martin of the Third district of Oregon. General Martin was retired in 1927, aftetr a distinguished military career, and will enter upon his Congressional duties at the age of 68. This recalls the record of the late Hon. Charles H. Steadman of North Carolina, who entered Congress when he was 70 years old and lived to serve 20 years in that body before his death a few months ago.

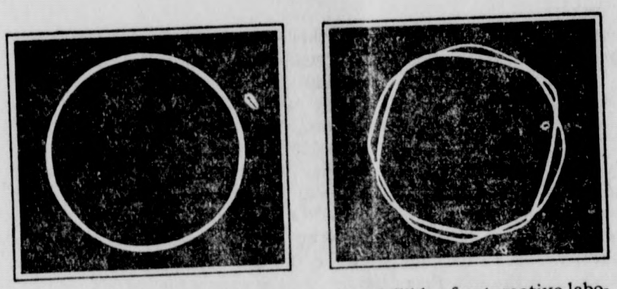
"Rounded" Performance!

Amazing Torsiograph tests prove The Dictator engine the smoothest Eight within hundreds of dollars of its price!

NO CAR in its price class matches the velvet smoothness of The Dictator's 81 horsepower engine. Its Torsiograph record is smoothly "rounded" in striking contrast to the roughness common to ordinary eights, sixes and fours.

No car in its price class has the effective carburetor silencing and the full-power engine muffling without back pressure that combine to give The Dictator Eight quiet and smoothness equaled only in high priced cars.

Studebaker goes to extremes not approached by any maker in this price class to remove vibration. The crankshaft of The Dictator engine has nine (9) bearings and is balanced not only statically but dynamically on machines that are marvels of precision.



The Torsiograph, one of the most nearly infallible of automotive laboratory instruments, records accurately the vibration of any rotating shaft. The closer the record chart approaches a true circle, the more nearly perfect the balance of the crankshaft. Above are shown the Torsiographic records of The Dictator Eight nine (9) bearing crankshaft and those of two other eights of double The Dictator's price. Notice the smooth roundness of The Dictator graph contrasted with the irregularity, or "humpiness" of the other two.

What remains of vibration is further minimized by a crankshaft vibration damper. Dual carburetion and manifolding, feeding exactly proportional amounts of fuel to each cylinder, avoid "starving" of the end cylinders and assure even power impulses.

And plus all this, plus the fact that The Dictator Eight has only 38.2 pounds of weight per horsepower, you also get Free Wheeling, greatest engineering advance since the electric starter. You get Free Wheeling's unique travel-smoothness, its freedom from clutch pushing, its 15% to 20% gas and oil savings, its officially approved increased safety.

Drive this Free Wheeling Dictator—the Eight without a "rough spot" in its whole sparkling speed range and you'll recognize, without a word of salesmanship, that it's far and away the best "buy" in its price range.

The Feather river bridge at Nicolaus will be closed to automobile traffic for the next two months, reports the Touring Bureau of the California State Automobile Association. Motorists desiring to use the Garden Highway from Sacramento may turn to the right at Nicolaus and follow good oiled road by way of Trowbridge into Marysville.

Pure seed production under the new California approved seed plan has been inaugurated by four counties, San Luis Obispo, Solano, Imperial and Yuba, it was announced by Professor B. H. Crocheron, director of agricultural extension for the University of California. The work is being fostered under the supervision of J. E. Coke, agronomy specialist.

California is much more air minded than the Eastern states, Lieutenant Walter Hinton, noted aviator and first man to span the Atlantic Ocean in an airplane, told more than 250 persons who attended an aviation day luncheon at Modesto. The luncheon was sponsored by the Modesto Exchange Club, and Ray Plummer, president, presided.

Inn City, famed throughout the West as "Pleasure City" of the great Mojave Desert mining area, located about four miles from Randsburg, is in ashes. Fire discovered in an empty building at 3:30 o'clock in the morning, swept through building after building as a heroic fire-fighting brigade battled with antiquated equipment to check its devastating advance. When the battle was over eight establishments were smoking ruins. The loss is estimated at $25,000.

Eight business houses and fourteen residences were destroyed when a fire, fanned by a heavy northeast wind, swept Stirling City, 35 miles east of Chico. The loss was estimated at $150,000. The town is logging headquarters for the Diamond Match Company, but the $250,000 mill and 9,000,000 feet of lumber escaped damage when the wind sent the flames in the opposite direction. More than forty acres of timber were burned before the fire was finally under control.

The California Institute of Technology's 200-inch telescope, now under construtcion probably will be completed in the summer of 1935, Dr. Francis G. Pease, Mt. Wilson Observatory astronomer, revealed in addressing members of Sigma Xi, scientific fraternity. The giant mirror, according to present plans will be constructed of fused quartz, but Dr. Pease indicated that difficulties experienced in making test mirrors of smaller size show that there is a possibility that time might have been saved by using pyrex glass in lieu of quartz. In addition to being easier to work with, the glass, he said, would be less costly, and might be almost as suitable for observations.

The very proper-and-above-board Henry E. Huntington Library and Art Gallery has gone into the counterfeiting business. But the counterfeiting is not criminal. But here is the story, as announced by the library. Only two copies of the original 1603 Original Edition of Shakespeare's "The Tragicall Historie of Hamlet Prince of Denmarke" are known to exist. One of the originals reposes in the British Museum, the other in the Huntington Library. Both are so valuable that each could be auctioned off for the price of many libraries. The valued copy, published 328 years ago, bears all sorts of thumb marks. The book is too valuable to be handled, so that is the answer to the counterfeiting. The job, even with the aid of a famous publishing concern, has not been an easy one.

Los Angeles county is doing its share i nbringing tourists and industrial plants to Southern California through the allocation of funds to the All-Year Club and the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, according to a statement from Chairman Wright of the Board of Supervisors. "Statistics show that all of us are now definitely in the tourist business, because tourists alone now support nearly $1,000,000,000 of capital investment in Southern California representing every line of business in the community," Supervisor Wright said. "It is interesting to not that more than $400,000,000 annually is spent by the 1,000,000 or more turists who vacation in Southern California, attracted in a large measure by the effective exploitation work of the organizations which the county has been able to assist financiallv."

To guard against poisoning of California residents by tainted shellfish, the State Board of Health has decided to "quarantine" the northern coast during the summer months and to forbid gathering of clams and mussels, it was announced recently. The decision came at a recent meeting when results of a study that followed last year's series of poisonings was announced. As a result, the coast line from Monterey to Klamath river, Del Norte county, will be closed against clam and mussel gathering during all of June, July, August and September.

An old river channel believed to be the source of the rich gold diggings at Kentucky ranch, in the Sierra east of Gridley, has been uncovered by Nelson Lund, rancher, who says the gravel is rich in gold.

Forty half-pound boxes of pure New Hampshire maple sugar have been distributed to Claremont Rotarians, coming as a gift to club members from the Rotary Club of Claremont, N. H. Bears are coming out early in Sequoia park this year. Some seven were seen more than a month ago and just recently ten or twelve were seen at the incinerator on the top of Bear Hill in Giant Forest. Usually snow lies on the ground until considerably later and the bears do not awaken from their winter sleep until the snow melts. When first awakened they are hungry and cross. Every effort is made to prevent them annoying campers and visitors are warned not to try to feed them. Early campers are advised to keep a light burning at night as a light or a shout will frighten the bears away. Ed Metzger, keeper of the bears, is expected in the forest about May 1, next.

Headed by former Governor Friend W. Richardson, who is president of the body, the California Press Association, eighty strong, left San Francisco recently on the liner Maui for a trip to the Hawaiian Islands. The party will return May 12. Mayor Rossi, San Francisco city officials and various newspaper folk were at the dock to see the party off. Country and weekly publishers and metropolitan editors composed the party, with their wives and families. The publishers will be entertained by the Honolulu newspaper fraternity, headed by the Star-Bulletin, the Advertiser and the Nippu Jiji. They will be guests at a Hawaiian luau or native feast and will visit the volcanic exhibits, the national park and other attractions.

Atty.-Gen. Webb ruled that Inyo county, as a government unit, can not legally sue the city of Los Angeles in an effort to protect water rights in Owens Valley, as no public rights are involved. The ruling was made at the request of District Attorney Guthrie of Inyo county. Residents of Inyo county had petitioned the County Commissioners to sue Los Angeles on the ground the Los Angeles Aqueduct is a public nuisance and in an effort to compel Los Angeles to accelerate the purchase of land in the Owens Valley and cease "dilatory tactics"; to force Los Angeles to make readjustments in property values to satisfy landowners, and to protect rights of the present landowners until satisfactory prices are paid by Los Angeles. Guthrie was informed private landowners can bring suits against Los Angeles if they felt aggrieved.

It should be remembered that the fishing season in the Tahoe district does not open until the 30th of May. In Alpine county the East and West Carson rivers from the California-Nevada boundary line to the headwaters have been closed. Winnemucca, Scotts and Burnside lakes and their tributaries are closed until May 30, 1931. In the San Joaquin watershed all streams and tributaries flowing into Long lake except Big Oak are closed throughout the season. In the Owens Valley section in Mono and Inyo counties the middle Cottonwood lake and the streams connected above and below are closed to fishing. Reverse creek and tributaries between June lake and Rush creek are also closed, as that portion of June lake lying between an east and west line drawn to close the north one-third area of said lake.

With the subdued roar of sulphur machines throughout the land, Kern county vineyardists are beginning their eternal battle against one of the major enemies of the grape—mildew. With this campaign under way and advocated for general practice by N. D. Hudson, assistant farm adviser, a second major campaign is also suggested. This is the fight against the tiny grape leaf hopper which, unless checked, will suck the very life and substance from grapevines. "It is now proven by thousands of examples all over the State," Hudson said, "that sulphur is not a cure for mildew, but only a preventive. As a preventive it must be on the leaves before mildew starts. This year, for perhaps the first time, vineyardists in the whole San Joaquin Valley have another serious pest to fight. Right from the start, in many districts, leaf hoppers are present in sufficient number to do damage."

Thirty-nine out of every thousand deaths in the United States are premature and result from preventable causes. This statement was made by Dean Langley Porter of the University of California medical school recently. He advocated more intensive education of the public in commonsense health facts. The trouble is, he said, physicians are unable to apply their knowledge of preventable diseases to the lives of many indivduals. Discussing the high cost of medical care, Dean Porter explained that a national committee is now studying

Mother's Day
Sunday, May 10, 1931
There is in all this cold and hollow world no fount of deep, strong, deathless love, save that within a mother's heart.
—Mrs. Hemans

All Nations Pay Tribute to "Mother"

Mother's day is the one day in the year when every real man or woman, boy or girl, should pay tribute to the "best mother in the whole world."

It is the day when every living mother with a son or daughter worthy of the name will receive a personal message from her child, and every mother who has passed beyond will be honored by the wearing of a flower or a Mother's day button by the child left behind.

Millions of people in America, Europe, Asia and Africa observe the day set apart by a Pennsylvania woman, Miss Anna Jarvis, of Philadelphia, whose idea has grown into an international demonstration for "Mother."

Following the Civil war, every day was "Mother's day" for Mrs. Anna Jarvis, the founder of the day of observance. Mrs. Jarvis was the daughter of a minister and in her efforts to alleviate the suffering caused by the war, she toiled almost day and night in the interest of widows and orphans, left bereaved by the holocaust of strife which had swept over the land, and dependent upon the bounty of more fortunate neighbors for sustenance.

In later years, Miss Anna Jarvis, following the work of her mother, conceived the idea that the heart of every mother would be gladdened if, on some particular day, she could be assured of receiving a personal message, or flower, or some other little token of love from her loved children.

Date Fixed by Miss Jarvis.

The result was the founding of "Mother's day" and as the late spring is one of the most beautiful seasons of the year, Miss Jarvis arbitrarily fixed the second Sunday in May as the official date for this observance.

Tentatively launched as a purely local event, the idea spread to other sections of Miss Jarvis' home state, Pennsylvania, and from there became an interstate affair, eventually becoming a nationally observed date. From America it spread to South America, across the borders into Canada and Mexico and thence across the seas to Europe, Asia and Africa. And today the teachings for the observance of this day dedicated to "the best mother in the world—your mother," are being disseminated in every continent on the globe.

Miss Anna Jarvis, the founder, while in Washington on business connected with the celebration, was asked for an interview on the founding of this day. She submitted the following, taken from the Congressional Record, in which it was printed by unanimous consent:

"It is doubtful if any movement of the times, in the way of a celebration, has such a strong and lasting appeal to persons of all races, creeds and classes as has the Mother's day celebration.

"It is the most universal of all of our celebrations, for all of our religious and patriotic observances are not without prejudice of some class, race or creed.

"The word 'mother' is the most potent of all words, wherever the foot of civilization has left its imprint.

"This Mother's day is not an idle sentiment. It is a great constructive movement of international interest. It is now celebrated annually around the globe.

"The people on the boardwalks of Honolulu and Atlantic City, and Australia on the other side of the globe, are just as enthusiastic for Mother's day as any places one might mention."

Honored in Army and Navy.

In the American army and navy Mother's day is celebrated with tender enthusiasm by officers and men alike. Indeed, this celebration is thought to be of great benefit to the morale of the enlisted men. Certainly it is a cherished occasion. Nothing but good can come from the observance of any special occasion that gets a man closer to the heart of a good mother through his letter, or visit, or other remembrance of home.

Nothing but good can come from setting apart one day of the year in the army and navy, in our homes, in our official and business life, and in the life of the whole nation to pay tribute to the memory of the beloved mothers and fathers who have gone before or to show grateful affection to the living.

Worthy of Remembrance.

Our American homes are the glory of our nation. Our mothers who gave to the nation lives they loved more than their own—the lives of their beloved sons, husbands, brothers, or other dear ones—are our inspiration.

One day of the year for remembrance of their sacrifices, their fidelity, their deeds, is not indeed a day lost.

Any movement that deepens home ties, that inspires better national life, that makes better sons and daughters is indeed constructive. Far be it from any thought of maudlin sentiment. And yet "sentiment" is part of the best and most gracious and ennobling things of life, especially that sentiment which clings to the words "mother" and "home."

One of the Mother's day celebration features is "home going" and "writing home." Not any person is too poor or busy at least to write a message home.

Legislative Approval.

It will ever be to the glory of America that the first legislation for the general display of the American flag as a custom was a resolution that Miss Jarvis succeeded some years ago in getting congress to pass.

Through this resolution it is now the custom for Old Glory to be displayed annually on Mother's day (Sunday) from all public buildings, schools, and other suitable places.

Is it not an inspiring thought that the mothers of the founders of our country, the mothers of our patriots, are thus honored by sons and daughters?

It hardly seems possible that Miss Jarvis would undertake more work, but she is planning the erection of a tribute to the mothers and homes of America in Washington. This monument will be one that will remind you and me of the "mothers of our hearts," and it should be a tribute that will make the stranger of foreign lands who may visit the Capital city think that American homes and mothers are the nation's idol.

This monument will not be for what some persons may call "great mothers," nor for women seeking greatness through some ancestral line, but for your mother and mine.—Washington Star.

Mother's Only Wages the Love of Her Children

This is the age of medals. A man without a medal of some sort is a misnomer. If a boy fly across the ocean, we give him a medal. If a sprinter run faster than any other human, we strike off a medal. If a patriot bare his breast to the bullets of the enemy, we cover his coat with medals. Pay is too paltry for heroes.

But what pay does mother get? She toils day and night without reward. Her work is never done. And at that it is the only work in the world that does not have the wages.

Down in the mountains of Georgia lived a poor widow. She had a few dull acres—and a bright boy. He surpassed anything in the district. So she stinted herself and sent him to

Emory college. On commencement day under pressure she went to see him receive his diploma after he had delivered his oration. However, he was also given the gold medal for scholarship. He unceremoniously strode off the platform, down the aisle, back under the gallery and pinned the honor on an old faded shawl, saying as he did it, "This belongs to you; you earned it."

Mother never raised Themistocles; she just raised us. She never ruled Russia with a rod of iron, like Catherine; she just ruled father and us—and never let us know it. She was never the queen of any country, like Elizabeth, not even the queen of the May; but she was queen in the heart of her home. And we really cared more for the queen mother than for all the queens of earth. Scotland may well say, "An ounce of mother is worth a pound of clergy."—Los Angeles Times.

Began Before Christian Era

Schauffler in his book on Mother's day states that the idea originated in the ceremonies incident to the worship of Rhea, the mother of gods, in Asia Minor, prior to the Christian era. The Greeks and Romans continued it as the festival of Hilaria, which was held on the ides of March. This festival was carried by the Romans into the Christian church, where the fourth Sunday in Lent was set aside as a time for the faithful to visit the church in which they were baptized—their mother church. It came to be known in the Angelican church as Mothering Sunday, and was a time when young persons bound out to service were allowed to visit their parents.

MIST GRANDCHILDREN

"It's a shame," said the raindrops. "We'll keep the people from seeing today—all those who insulted you and said they didn't like you," said the little mist grandchildren to the King of the Clouds.

"Yes," Said the King.

"We most certainly will," said Nurse Fog.

"Did people insult you?" asked the raindrops of the King of the Clouds.

"Yes, they did," said the King of the Clouds.

"Come on, make haste, get ready, children," said old Nurse Fog to the mist grandchildren.

"We'll come right away, nurse," said the mist grandchildren. "We'll not wait to put on our best dresses. We'll wear our good every day working ones, the nice, dark, gray dresses that make the days look so dark when we wear them."

"That's right, mist grandchildren," said Nurse Fog.

"I'm glad you understand so well. You know how to dress for working.

"You don't get yourselves all fussed up and ruin your best frocks which you can wear on party days behind the King of the Clouds' home.

"You wear the proper clothes at the proper and correct times, that's what you do."

"Rainy day clothes, eh, nurse?" laughed the mist grandchildren.

"Yes, rainy day clothes," said old Nurse Fog. "And I will wear my good gray coat and hat and dress and my gray rubbers.

"Not that I mind getting wet—gracious how could I mind that when I am so damp a creature myself?

"But I like my gray rubbers as that makes the fog thicker. And I like to make the fog thicker."

"Of course you do," said the King of the Clouds. "When you are the fog itself—of course you do!

"Dear old faithful Nurse Fog! You have always taken fine care of the children."

"And who wouldn't?" Nurse Fog answered. "They are such a fine set of children.

"They are dears—right after my own foggy heart. I love them so much."

"Of course it is natural that you would be fond of them," said the King of the Clouds.

"Do tell us what the insult was," the raindrops asked.

Nurse Fog.

"It was this way," said the King of the Clouds. "Some people said today that there hadn't been rain in some time and that they were very glad of this.

"Wasn't that an insult?"

"It was indeed," the others all said.

So the raindrops came pattering down to the earth, and the mist grandchildren went for a long, long walk, all over the place with their dear faithful Nurse Fog.

What a fine walk the mist grandchildren had, and how much they enjoyed wearing their old clothes and covering things up so that the people were confused!

Tongue Twisters

Two toads totally tired trying to trot to Tilbury. Seven Severn seamen setting sail southwards. Six stout Scotch soldiers shooting snipe. Five Frenchmen flying from France for fashions. Nine nimble noblemen nibbling nutmegs. Eight Englishmen examining Europe. Twelve twittering tom-tits twisting twigs. Eleven elegant elephants examining every element.

Didn't Seem Right

A little girl attending Episcopal church for the first time was amazed to see all kneel suddenly. She asked her mother what they were going to do. Her mother replied, "Hush, they're going to say their prayers."

"What," she said in surprised tones, "with all their clothes on?"

MOUNT VERNON AT PARIS

If George Washington could suddenly re-visit this world, appearing in Paris this summer he would not have to suffer the bewilderment of Rip Van Winkle. At the International Colonial Exposition, he would find his Mount Vernon home reproduced in every detail. There he would encounter people dressed as in his day and would witness many historical incidents as they were enacted at his home during the eighteenth century.

One of the chief participants in this quaint retrospective drama is Anne Madison Washington, who recently sailed for Paris to begin her duties as official hostess of the over-seas Mount Vernon at the opening of the Exposition tomorrow, May 2. She is a direct descendant of John Augustine Washington, brother of George Washington, and is the daughter of Lawrence Washington, who was born at Mount Vernon. Because of her free access to the Mount Vernon home and grounds on the Potomac, Miss Washington has been able to render most valuable assistance to C. Bascom Slemp, commissioner general of the American exhibit, in carrying out the duplication of Washington's residence.

In contrast to the colonial Washington home, the Orient will be represented at Paris by a reproduction of the Taj Mahal of Agra, India, said to be the most beautiful building ever erected. Arrangements for the duplication of this famous mausoleum were made by wealthy Indian maharajahs, and funds were advanced by the Aga Kahn, the Maharajah of Kapurthala and other Indian princes.

The Taj Mahal was built between 1692 and 1650 at a gigantic cost, to commemorate the love of the Shah Jehan for his favorite wife, Mumtaz-i-Mahal. It is thought to be the finest example existent of the ancient culture of Hindustan. In addition to the white marble building itself, the beautiful gardens surrounding the mausoleum also will be reproduced in Paris.

Who remembers the old-fashioned love songs that didn't sound like the wail of a lost soul?

One blessing conferred by the radio is that some speeches have been limited to fifteen minutes.

KING ALFONSO FALLS

After clinging to a shaky throne during many years of turbulence, King Alfonso XIII of Spain finally bowed to the will of the people, as expressed in a recent election, and abdicated on April 14. Thus another of the world's ancient monarchies becomes a republic.

It may be recalled that a provisional republic was set up in Spain in 1873, upon the resignation of King Amadeus, in the face of popular opposition. But this lasted only a few months, when Alfonso XII, father of the recent king, was called to the throne, reigning until his death in 1885.

Alfonso XII was born on May 17, 1886, several months after his father's death, and was proclaimed king at his birth, his mother acting as regent until he reached his majority in 1902. During the regency the Spanish-American war cost Spain her Cuban and Philippine possessions.

In 1906, Alfonso married Princess Ena, niece of Edward VII and cousin of George V of England, who has borne him six children. He and his bride narrowly escaped death when a bomb was hurled at their wedding procession. Several other unsuccessful plots and attempts on his life have marked his reign.

Now approaching his forty-fifth birthday, Alfonso XIII, last of the Bourbon rulers, lays down his scepter, probably to spend the remainder of his life in exile. If the loss of his throne brings him regret, he may be comforted by the fact that he will have measurably less to worry about in future, and a far better prospect of living the alloted span of three score and ten.

ADLESS RADIO CHAIN?

It is reported that John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and other philanthropists may finance a $100,000,000 broadcasting system which will permit no advertising in connection with its programs.

A first step in the plan to raise the cultural standard of radio broadcasting is seen in the formation of a national advisory council on radio in education, with eminent educators, scientists, public officials and other leading citizens as council members.

The prospect of better radio programs, unmarred by advertising harangues, will be most pleasing to the millions of owners of receiving sets.

THE WOMEN FLYERS

America's intrepid women flyers, of whom Ruth Nichols, Elinor Smith and Amelia Earhart Putnam appear to be out in front, are breaking one another's records so often that it is difficult to keep up with them.

One of the latest records set is that for speed, in which Ruth Nichols attained a velocity of more than 210 miles an hour, smashing Mrs. Putnam's previous record for women of 181 miles per hour.

Miss Nichols also holds the transcontinental speed record, and last month set a new women's altitude record, but this has been exceeded by Miss Smith, it is believed, although the result of an official examination of her recording instruments had not been made public at the time this was written.

Amelia Earhart Putnam has been doing remarkable stunts with the new autogiro, or "windmill" plane, one of which was to reach an altitude of about 19,000 feet, the greatest height so far attained by either man or woman in this type of aircraft.

All the records mentioned above may have been broken by the time this gets in print, for these girls are making aviation history with a vengeance.

VALENTINO WORSHIP

According to a London film critic, no man in history ever inspired such adoration from women as did Rudolph Valentino, the famed Italian-born film star who died in 1926 at the age of 31.

Three years ago his admirers among English women formed the Valentino Association, which now has branches in many countries. By these women, few of whom ever saw him except on the screen, he has been elevated to something like sainthood since his death, and his memory is kept alive among them by making gifts in hs name, distributing his photographs, through correspondence and in other ways.

Valention received a good education in his native Italy and came to the United States in 1913, first appearing as a dancer, then in musical comedy, and after being stranded in San Francisco he entered motion pictures in Hollywood, taking minor parts. He scored his first great success in "The Four Horsemen," after which his career until his death was a succession of triumphs. He was twice married and twice divorced. He died from peritonitis following operations for gastric ulcer and appendicitis.

Conceding his great ability as an actor and the charm of his personality, the fact that he is still literally worshipped by thousands of women throughout the world is somewhat difficult to understand. We read that "some have personal souvenirs of him which they keep in the form of a shrine, constantly surrounded by fresh flowers; they arrange for revivals of his films everywhere and travel incredible distances to see them, even bringing wreathes to leave in the cinema vestibule."

Perhaps the reason we don't understand all this is that we don't understand women.

WOMEN WEAR COTTON

Thousands of women throughout the South are joining the "wear cotton" movement, with a view to creating a greater demand for cotton fabrics and consequent increase in cotton prices.

In many communities style shows featuring cotton wearing apparel have been held, and women's organizations generally are backing the movement. Two hundred women attended the annual convention of the Mississippi Federation of Women's Clubs, all wearing cotton dresses and hats. The Georgia state Congress of Parents and Teachers voted unanimously to request public school authorities to rule in favor of cotton for graduating dresses this year.

New industrial uses for cotton are being sought by organizations of growers and manufacturers, aided by experts of the Department of Agriculture, and considerable success in this direction has been attained.

In spite of these laudable efforts to increase consumption, the South is faced with a great surplus, and unless the acreage can be drastically reduced through co-operative effort the price of cotton is likely to remain low for a long time to come.

FEAR OUR WORST ENEMY

Why is recovery from the economic depression so slow? Because capital is afraid, according to State Treasurer Levitan of Wisconsin. He declares that many millions of dollars now lie inactive in banks because the owners of this money are possessed with fear.

Persons who invested readily in stocks, bonds, real estate and varied business enterprises during prosperous times now hold back and await developments. And so long as they hold back through fear, so long will a resumption of normal industrial activity be retarded.

In is inevitable that general prosperity will come back in time, but the timidity of capital may delay a return to normal conditions. And it seems that little can be done to overcome that timidity.

A GREAT NEGRO SCHOOL

Recently Tuskegee Institute, Alabama's great institution for negro education, celebrated its fiftieth anniversary. To those who think the negro is persecuted and unappreciated in the South, some incidents of the anniversary celebration may be enlightening.

Speakers on the program included such noted white Southern educators and citizens as Dr. George Denny, president of the University of Alabama; Dr. M. Ashby Jones, nationally known Baptist minister and son of a Confederate officer; and others of almost equal prominence. President Hoover sent a message of congratulation and good wishes.

Tuskegee Institute, founded by the famous negro educator and humanitarian, Booker T. Washington, in a shanty and an old church on April 12, 1881, with thirty pupils, has grown to be an outstanding institution of learning, with about 250 teachers and more than 3,000 students.

Booker T. Washington died in 1915, since which time his work has been ably carried on by Robert Moton, another negro educator of high ability. Both Washington and Moton met with fine success because of their profound understanding of the negro's problem and the real sentiments of his Southern neighbors and friends. As a result of their labors the South is proud of Tuskegee Institute and it is held in high esteem by citizens in every station in life.

This feeling was concisely expressed by John Temple Graves of the Birmingham Age-Herald in commenting in the semi-centennial celebration, in these words: "Tuskegee Institute was never more cordially recognized as an integral part of the South's educational and economic scheme than it is today."

"I've been a dog," he murmured sadly. "It serves me right. Of course I have the nerve of a lion tamer to ask this, but—will you give me another chance, Nellie? Will you take me back—on probation?"

"I accept. I'll take you back—not as a sweetheart but as the dear old friend you were before you told me you loved me and asked me to marry you. Meanwhile, you are not to run away from Pilarcitos. You must stay here and make your campaign for mayor."

"I can never be elected mayor now," he assured her. "That suit and the publication of my letters to Doris—"

"Were they love letters, Elmer?"

He hung his head. "I tried to make them sound that way, but I don't think they were as enthusiastic as ones I could have written you under the same circumstances. Still, I suppose they're silly enough to tickle Pilarcitos to death. They'll be hard for me to laugh off."

"Take the chance," she urged.

"But you announced your candidacy with a blare of trumpets, as it were. You'll have to enter the fight now."

Elmer shuddered. "But I never intended to run for mayor this year," he protested lamely. "I was merely announcing myself as a candidate to run against the incumbent when he came up for re-election, as I figured he would. Now the infernal kill-joy has disappointed everybody by resigning and moving out of the county, the city council is deadlocked over the appointment of his successor and in order to save their faces they have ordered a special election to decide who shall be mayor to fill the unexpired term. So you see, Nellie, I've got an excellent excuse for withdrawing now. I can say I do not care to make a campaign for the unexpired term, because it will not afford me an opportunity to initiate reforms. All my friends will understand—"

"You remind me of a small boy who whistles up his courage as he passes the cemetery after dark. Elmer, you know very well that if you are elected to fill the unexpired term and make good you can be elected for the next two-year term without half trying."

"No, I cannot. I'll make an announcement in the Clarion that, upon further consideration, I find that my business affairs will not permit of my making the race and accordingly I am withdrawing my candidacy."

"If you do that," Nellie assured him, "you might as well abandon all hope of marrying me eventually. I could never stand a quitter. I want you to enter that fight even if you do lose it."

He squirmed in his chair. "The very thought of it makes me shudder, Nellie. Have a heart! Permit me to withdraw now, marry me and go away with me—to France or Italy—anywhere to escape. Then when the blow falls I'll not be here to be laughed at. Nothing in this world can be of surpassing interest for more than nine days, and in a year or two from now when we return the whole miserable affair will have been forgotten."

"I dare say, Elmer. In that length of time you will have been forgotten, too. You will have lost your leadership, so essential to your future here. You must remain here and build up your leadership."

"Then marry me and help me stand it."

"No, I had nothing to do with getting you into this jam and you'll have to fight your own way out. If you do that, however, the day I find it out I'll marry you. But if you quit, if you run—count me out of your calculations."

He groaned inwardly.

"You haven't the slightest conception of a woman's pride, Elmer," Nellie went on with motherly tenderness. "That adventuress is trying to break you, to run you out of your own country. I'm trying to make you, to keep you from being run out. The question therefore resolves itself into this: who is going to win? You are the only human being who can decide that question, and I call upon you to decide it here and now or forfeit, not only the fragments of my former love for you, but my future friendship and respect for you. Speak up, Elmer, or remain forever silent!"

"You win," he declared without an instant's hesitation. "I don't care what happens to me provided I do not humiliate you again. I can take a licking, you know."

"Smiling, I hope."

"Well, at any rate, in silence."

"That remains to be seen," said Nellie darkly. "Your courage and sportsmanship are going to be tested in a manner of which you little dream. Our future happiness depends upon how well or how poorly you emerge from that test."

Elmer thought of his love letters to Doris and shuddered again.

"You're not eating anything," Nellie challenged him suddenly. "Why, you haven't taken a single bite!"

"If I did I'd feel as vulgar and insensate as a pig," he replied.

"Cheer up, Elmer. There is no hell."

"Well, then, I'm up to my ears in something just as hot." He eyed her half angrily. "And you're the little devil that's stoking the fire."

Nellie half rose from her chair and leaned across the table toward him. "Kiss me, booby!" she commanded fiercely. And Elmer obeyed.

Up to the day he received, from that anonymous Los Angeles source, the letters he had written his inamorata, Elmer made no progress in the matter of mapping out his campaign for mayor. He was much too nervous, too overwhelmed with grave apprehensions, to focus his mind on this adventure which could only end in disaster. He spent his days fishing and his nights in gloomy meditation.

Longfellow, in his "Hiawatha," observes that misfortunes come not singly. The poet might, with equal truth, have written that blessings come in flocks. Suddenly came the letter from Doris, charging him with the perpetration of a newer and more despicable crime and vowing vengeance when her time should be up. The receipt of the newspaper clipping solved the mystery of the girl's letter and while Elmer was rejoicing at this infalliable evidence of a stay of execution, and making up his mind to make the fur fly in his campaign for mayor now that fate had intervened and given him a fighting chance to win, the packet of love letters arrived.

The comfort that had been his just previous to this was the most extravagant grief in comparison with the delirious delight that descended upon him now.

It was the greatest day in history. When his paroxysm of delight had in a measure abated, he proceeded to read the letters in the order of their dates.

After reading the third letter he shook as with an ague, for he discovered that he had indeed asked Doris to marry him! He essayed to read the fourth letter and groaned aloud. It was terrible. So he burned them all.

He was waiting outside the bank when Nellie came out at five o'clock. "Hop into this car and come away with me, Nellie," he ordered, "or I'll kidnap you."

Nellie hopped in, and they whirled away into the country. Once clear of the town Elmer's hand stole over and closed over Nellie's. She jerked it away, but he seized her arm roughly and again possessed himself of her hand, which he retained by brute force. Still he said nothing, so Nellie maintained silence. Presently she spoke, to break an embarrassing silence.

"What have you been doing all day, Elmer?"

"I've been singing."

"Bet you a hundred dollars I know what you've been singing."

"Taken. What have I been singing?"

"The national anthem of Siam."

"You lose. I don't know it."

"Oh, yes, you do!"

"What's it called?"

"Whatanassiam," she informed him.

Without a moment's hesitation Elmer Butterworth Clarke took out his wallet and solemnly handed Nellie Cathcart a hundred-dollar bill, and Nellie took it!

When Elmer rose the following morning he remembered that if he intended to be mayor of Pilarcitos it behooved him to be up and doing. He had no time to spare.

His first idea was to contract with the Pilarcitos Silver Cornet band to play at his political rallies exclusively, thus forcing his opponents to import their music expensively from surrounding towns.

The extent of his advertising and the elaborate preparations for his campaign alarmed and irritated his opponents, the alarm being occasioned by first-hand knowledge that they were being opposed by a young, forceful, popular man, without a blemish on his character and with an excellent war record. His strength in fraternal circles was well known, and of course he would get the old soldier vote in its entirety. The irritation of the enemy was born of an apprehension that if they were to oppose him successfully they would have to adopt the pace he had set, which predicated the spending of more money than they cared to think about. Also, they would have to make speeches they were incapable of making with a tithe of the ease, grace and logic of their youthful opponent.

Their best plan lay in ancient political strategy.

By mutual consent the Democratic and the Republican candidates concluded to refrain from fighting each other and concentrate their fire on Elmer.

To Elmer competition was the joy of life. He had been born with the winning spirit and he resolved to leave no stone unturned to secure his objective. However, he overlooked one stone. Nellie Cathcart called it to his attention.

"I suppose, Elmer, you're going to spend a couple of thousand dollars to win an office that pays a salary of only one hundred dollars a month."

"I suppose so. The confounded job is really a nuisance, but now that I'm in the race I'm not going to let a little money stand in the way of victory."

"Well, you had better form the Elmer B. Clarke Campaign committee and permit it to spend that money," she suggested. "Name the committee and appoint me treasurer. You have already spent as much money as you are permitted to spend under the law; if you spend more, you will violate the purity of the election law; if you win, your enemies will check up on you after the election, indict you, convict you and deprive you of your hard-won office."

"But I can't pass the hat for my campaign expenses," he protested, bewildered.

"Organize your finance committee, head the subscription list with a fifty-dollar donation and open an account in Anse Moody's bank. Then send your bills to me and, as treasurer, I will pay them."

"But how?"

"Never mind how. As treasurer that will be my worry. You stick to your knitting."

"But where can you get the money?"

"I'll get it somewhere. Elmer, did you ever see a cat reconnoiter a hole in a fence? He sticks his head through and if his whiskers touch he knows he cannot get his body through, so he climbs over the fence. Well, I'm going to crawl through this hole without touching my financial whiskers."

She did. She gave the Pilarcitos Commercial Trust & Savings bank a second mortgage for two thousand dollars on the property she had bought from Elmer Clarke, and old Anse Moody charged her ten per cent interest on the loan and refused to make it for more than a year. This money she deposited to the credit of the Elmer B. Clarke Campaign committee, and on the day after the election she paid her last bill, closed up her account and had four hundred dollars left.

And on election day Elmer received two votes in excess of the total votes cast for his opponents. It was a stupendous, a sweeping victory, and the politically wise ascribed it to but one thing, to wit, tremendous public admiration for Elmer Clarke's modesty. Throughout the campaign he had not once addressed the local post of the American Legion, nor had he appeared at any meetings of it. He had made absolutely no appeal for the old soldier vote, either verbally or in print; not once had he referred to his war record and cited the fact that he had been in the army. Everybody in Pilarcitos had felt certain Elmer would wave the bloody shirt, and he had disappointed them; wherefore, in gratitude and admiration, they had elected him.

Nellie was far happier than Elmer when the votes were counted. Elmer had a rather well-defined idea that he had labored and brought forth a mouse—that he had fought for the sheer love of a fight. Now that he had a certificate of election he shuddered to think he would have to use it. But Nellie, her plans for his career long since made, merely checked off another milestone on the road to the heights; and when Elmer, having taken his oath of office, secured a two-weeks' leave of absence from the city council in order to rest after his furious campaign, Nellie was relieved to be rid of him, even for that brief period. Elmer betook himself again to Los Angeles, but Nellie did not keep an eye on him this time. She knew Elmer had had an ample sufficiency of wandering in strange pastures and that the next damsel who "sold him a pup" would have to be adroit to a degree something more than humanly possible.

Upon his return Elmer devoted himself assiduously to his duties as mayor for three months; during which period he saw as much of Nellie as possible. Then, having secured a sixty-day leave of absence from the city council, he departed on his long-deferred trip to Muscatine, Iowa, to settle the estate of his late Uncle Hiram.

For some mysterious reason Nellie was very distrait the night before he left. In the stuffy parlor of the old Tully home they said goodby and Elmer was amazed to see her go completely out of control for the first time in their acquaintance. She put her arms around his neck and wept for about five minutes. Elmer was mystified.

In vain Elmer reminded her that he would wire her frequently—long night letters; that he would write her daily and send his letters by air mail; that he would telephone her every Saturday night.

She refused to be comforted and continued to sob:

"Oh, Elmer, you poor boy! You good, kind-hearted, decent old thing,

She Refused to be Comforted, and Continued to Sob.

I—I—want you to—to promise—whatever happens, you'll—come back—t-t-to me, darling."

"Why, of course I'll come back to you, Nellie! Why, I won't even look at another girl!"

"I don't mean that. I'm thinking of something else—no matter what—and I want you—b-b-back. Oh, Elmer, I want you to come back j-j-just as s-s-soon as the estate is—c-c-closed."

"Ho-ho!" he laughed. "So that's the way the cat jumps, eh? You're afraid I'll collect my roll and start wandering. You're afraid I'll wander so long and so far I'll forget you, eh? Hum-um! A fat chance. Twenty-four hours after that estate is definitely closed I'll be aboard the rattler headed home—but only on one condition."

"I kn-kn-know. Provided I marry you shortly after you return."

"That's the program. How about it, sweetheart?"

"Well, if you'll come back I'll marry you, Elmer. You'll never have to ask me again. All you'll have to do will be to—n-n-name the day."

"I'll wire you the date before I start west. Word of honor now, Nellie, that nothing—understand, nothing—can induce you to change your mind?"

"Word of honor, Elmer. And will you give me your word of honor that you'll come right back to me when the estate is settled?"

"I do—and I hope my teeth may drop out if I do not."

"And you'll not permit anything—anything in all the world—to make you break your promise?"

"I'd rather be a hungry tramp, without a place to lay my head, than break the least of my promises to you."

She kissed him half a dozen times and thrust him gently out of the door, which she closed upon him and then ran upstairs to her room to have a real cry.

Thus did they part.

Brazilian Nut Pickers Victimized by Buyers

The business of gathering Brazil nuts in the Amazon jungle resolves itself into a skin game for the natives concerned when the traders, who follow the harvest, arrive with their boatloads of rum and trinkets.

Near a group of huts on the river bank the trade boat stops, writes Hugo Franklin in the Boston Transcript, and there the merchandise is displayed in an improvised "store." The trader sits, like the spider in its web, behind a battery of jugs of rum, surrounded by a few pieces of bright-colored goods, tobacco, bags of salt, cans of kerosene, sometimes even cases of cheap beer.

The nut pickers could make a good profit on the long trip up the river to the nut forests if only they would shun the trader, but little by little their crop piles up beside the store. At the end of the season the poor natives owe money to the traders and, unhappy and penniless, offer to pay the debt by helping to load the nuts on the boat and work their way back to civilization.

Coureurs Des Bois

The coureurs des bois, later called voyageurs, were, literally, forest rovers. During the French regime immense forests covered Canada, which teemed with fur-bearing animals. Hunting, therefore, and the consequent fur trade with the Indians appealed to some adventurous spirits more than farming, and as a result, a large number took to the former life and became an important factor in the pioneer development of new Canada. They figure picturesquely in early Canadian history and in subsequent fiction.

Ancient Worms

Completely mummified worms, millions of years older than the mummies at the Pharaohs, are on exhibit in the Feld museum, Chicago. Having been imbedded in shaley rock, it goes without saying that they existed when the rock was formed. Ordinarily soft-bodied creatures decompose quickly, so such ancient worm fossils are immensely interesting to zoologists. They reveal facts regarding times before backbones were developed.

Achieving Success

Some men suceed by what they know; some by what they do; and a few by what they are.—Elbert Hubbard.

Life may be one grand, sweet song, but most of us are unable to sing.

My Greatest Thrill in Sport

By JACK KELLY
World's Champion Single Sculler

My greatest thrill came after the completion of the race in which I defeated Bob Dibble, then holder of the Canadian and American rowing championship, on July 4, 1920.

Jack Kelly.

It was a terrific race. Fred Paisted, the great professional sculler, who had rowed against Hanlan and all the stars of his day, said that it was the finest he had ever seen. The finish was a flaming dash into which we each threw all our remaining strength, and the prow of my shell went over the line ahead of his.

We were both swaying in our seats when we stopped rowing, but I was buoyed up by the victory and consequently felt better than Dibble. After we rested about five minutes, I moved over to Bob, as we always shook hands in the boat after a race, but I noticed his face had taken on a whitish-green hue which always preceded a collapse from exhaustion.

Just as I reached to take his hand he collapsed completely and fell out of his boat into the river. I was not in much better condition, but without thinking I dived over after him. Unfortunately his outrigger caught me in the stomach and gave me a two-inch gash which knocked any remaining breath out of me. As soon as I hit the water I swallowed half the Schuylkill, so the would-be life saver found himself fighting for his own life.

I struggled to get my head above water and finally was successful. I had forgotten Dibble entirely for the moment, but as soon as I had coughed all the water out of my lungs, I caught hold of the stern of one of the shells, which luckily was right at my hand.

I then looked for Dibble but did not see him, when suddenly his hand shot up from under the water and I reached, caught hold of his wrist and pulled it over the boat.

Strain as I would, I could not get his mouth above the level of the water and every time a wave rippled the water, some would go into his mouth and he would cough. I was afraid to change my grip for fear I would lose him altogether.

Finally Harry Burke and Elliot Newlin, the referees of the race, went overboard and saved the pair of us. Dibble did not regain consciousness for several hours, and incidentally that race proved the finish of the career of the greatest sculler I have ever met.

Yes, all things considered, I've never had a greater thrill than when I went into the Schuylkill that blistering afternoon, after I had defeated Bob Dibble.

Great Volo Developing Into One of Best Sires

Judging by the way the youngsters by him have performed, the trotting stallion, the Great Volo, 2.02¼, recently purchased by Hanover show farms, Hanover, Pa., from Sanford Small, Boston, Mass., gives promise of becoming one of the best speed siring sons of his illustrious sire, Peter the Great, 2.07¼.

While only on the threshold of his career as a sire, the Great Volo is already the sire of several high-class youngsters, among them the crack two-year-old trotting filly, Calumet Belricka that raced around 2.05 this year on the Grand Circuit.

The Great Volo was bred at Laurel Hall farm, Indianapolis, and, under the guiding hand of Walter Cox, trotted many sparkling races along the Grand Circuit. He was a horse that always trotted the last part of his miles the best, and Cox never feared about his gameness.

He trotted to his record in a winning race at Columbus in 1923 and in this battle defeated Peter the Brewer 2.02½, Great Britton, 2.02¼, Czar Worthy, 2.01¼, and other good trotters.

He is a full brother of Peter Volo, 4, 2.02, the sire that has them all talking these days, being by Peter the Great, 2.07¼ and out of Nervolo Belle, that matron that produced these two great trotters, also Volga, 3, 2.04½, and three other 2.10 trotters.

Hornsby Would Rather Have Woody English

When shortstops are mentioned in the National league you think of Jackson and Gelbert, Wright and Maranville, but Hornsby would much rather have English.

"He is the most unappreciated ball player in the league," says Hornsby. "To judge a ball player's real value you've got to play alongside of him and I've had an opportunity to get first-hand information on English. He makes some errors, that's true, but that's all right with me. He makes errors because he goes after everything. He goes after every tough chance. He never sidesteps anything and he is smart. He knows how to play batters. He doesn't give away plays and he's there in a pinch. He comes up when he should come up, but when a lot of others go down."

SUCCESSFUL RACING MEET AT TANFORAN

The spring racing meet at Tanforan under the auspices of the Pacific Coast Breeders Association came to a close last Saturday, after a twenty-one day session that was a most pronounced success. If there had been any doubt as to the popularity of clean racing with the residents of this section of the state, that doubt has been thoroughly dispelled.

Most gratifying numbers of followers of the king of sports were in attendance at each day's meet, and it is probable that the meet could have been continued for an indefinite time, such was the response of the public.

When the fall meet opens the members of the Pacific Coast Breeders Association may be assured of the same gratifying patronage, as the session just closed was all that could be desired, clean in every way, and most entertaining.

A slight rain failed to dampen the ardor of the crowd last Saturday, the closing day, more than 25,000 enthusiasts journeying to Tanforan to witness a program of racing that was a fitting climax to the successful meet.

BICYCLE RACES SCHEDULED FOR GOLDEN GATE PARK

The New Century Wheelmen Club, 1001 Oak street, San Francisco, are sponsoring a series of bicycle races which will be held Sunday, May 10, at the old stadium, Golden Gate Park, San Francisco, at 1 P. M. Preliminary to the races there will be a musical program under the direction of the Municipal Park Band. One of the most exciting and fastest of the nine races listed will be the first race, which is a thirty mile, six man team relay race, each man riding five miles. The track has recently been put in excellent condition by the Park Commission, and it is the expectation of all bicycle enthusiasts that all past records will be broken. The New Century Wheelmen Club, active in cicling since 1900, is now enjoying one of its greatest years, having the largest representation in its history, including such Pacific Coast stars as Steve O'Connor, state champion bicycle rider of 1922. Besides a large social membership, the club boasts of twenty-two active cyclists and a score of veteran riders who are now prominent business men in San Francisco.

One very serious disadvantage of the machine age for a lot of us is that we have to worry along with last year's model.

THOMAS JEFFERSON'S 188TH ANNIVERSARY

In the picturesque and dramatic period just before, during and immediately after the Revolutionary war, there are probably but few figures who stand out in American history as does Thomas Jefferson, third president of the United States, and the most conspicuous apostle of democracy in America, according to the Division of Information and Publication of the George Washington Bicentennial Commission.

April 13, 1931, marked the one hundred and eighty-eighth anniversary of his birth at Shadwell, Albemarle county, Virginia. By a strange coincidence he died on July 4, 1826, the fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence, on the same day as John Adams, the second president of the United States, and (with one interruption from 1795 to 1809) life-long friends.

No American at this time had such versatility or such diversified interests. Jefferson was asked to draft the Declaration of Independence because of his reputation as a writer. Adams thus tells the story: "He brought with him a reputation for literary science and the happy talent for composition. Writings of his were handed about, remarkable for their peculiar felicity of expression. It was the 'Summary View' which elicited the admiration of Edmund Burke."

Jefferson was a student of William and Mary College at Williamsburg, Virginia. In addition to excelling in other studies, he had a good knowledge of Latin, Green and French, to which he soon added Italian and Spanish. He had an artistic temperament, loved music and was an exceptionally good violinist. He was proficient in out-door sports, and an excellent horseman. Thoroughbred horses were to him a necessary luxury.

Soon after leaving college, he entered a law office, and after five years of close study, was admitted to the bar in 1767. His thorough preparation enabled him to compete from the first with the leading lawyers of the colony.

On January 1, 1772, he married Martha Wayles Skelton, a childless widow of 23, very handsome, accomplished, and very fond of music. Their married life was exceedingly happy, and Jefferson never remarried after her early death. Of six children, two daughters alone survived infancy. Jefferson was emotional, and very affectinate at home, and his generous and devoted relations with his children and grandchildren are among the finest features of his character.

In 1779, at almost the gloomiest stage of the war in the Southern states, Jefferson succeeded Patrick Henry as Governor of Virginia, being the second to hold that office after the organization of the government. In his second term the state was overrun by British troops, and Jefferson, a civilian, was blamed for the ineffectual resistance. Most of the criticism of his administration was grossly unjust. His conduct being attacked, he declined re-election to the Governorship, but was unanimously returned by Albemarle as a delegate to the state legislature.

From 1784 to 1789 Jefferson was in France, first under an appointment to collaborate with Benjamin Franklin and John Adams in negotiating treaties of commerce with European countries, and then as Franklin's successor as minister to France. He was exceedingly popular as a minister. During this time he succeeded in negotiating a treaty of amity and commerce with Prussia and one with Morocco, and negotiated with France a "convention defining and establishing the rights of consuls and vice-consuls."

When Jefferson left France it was with the intention of soon returning, but President Washington tendered him the Secretaryship of State and he reluctantly accepted. Alexander Hamilton was Secretary of the Treasury. These two men, antipodal in temperament and political belief, clashed with unreconciliable hositilty. first on the financial proposals of Hamilton, which were adopted by Congress against the protests of Jefferson, then on the questions with regard to France and Great Britain, Jefferson's sympathies being predominately with the former, Hamilton's with the latter. They formed about themselves two great parties, which took the names of Republican and Federalist. The schools of thought for which they stood have since contended for mastery in American politics. The name Republican was dropped at the time of the war of 1812. In 1853 it was revived for a new party of very different political principles.

Jefferson was elected President, entering upon his duties March 4, 1801, and re-elected in 1804. His administation was distinguished by the simplicity that marked his conduct in private life.

When, on March 4, 1809, he retired from the Presidency, he had been almost continuously in tthe public service for forty years. He refused to be re-elected, for the third time, though requested by the legislatures of five states to be a candidate. Thus, following Washington's example, he helped to establish a precedent deemed by him of great importance for preserving a democratic spirit in the Presidency.

When he died, he chose for his tomb the epitaph: "Here was buried Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence, of the Statute of Virginia for Religious Freedom, and Father of the University of Virginia."

DISABLED VETERANS ARE MAKING POPPIES

Thousands of red Memorial Poppies are being made in the seven Government hospitals in California by disabled veterans, for the annual sale on Poppy Day, May 23, by the units of the American Legion Auxiliary.

Poppy Day is nation-wide in scope and the replica of the little wild flower that grows in the fields of Flanders and France is sold in every community on the Saturday before Memorial day.

The purpose of the Poppy Sale is two-fold. First, to honor the war dead by wearing the flower which grows on the fields where the American soldiers answered the last call; and second, ao aid the living victims of the war, the disabled veterans, their families and the families of the dead.

Last year more than 220,000 of the bright red poppies were sold in California, according to Mrs. Ethel M. Flynn, Poppy chairman of the California Department of the American Legion Auxiliary, and this year it is expected that a great increase in sales will be shown, as the need for the money to render aid to veterans' families is greater than ever. According to Mrs. Flynn, the 300 units of the Auxiliary in this state are now organizing for the sale, and on May 23 will have a force of volunteer workers in every community offering this symbol of war sacrifice to the public.
